Gene Screener

Badacz zgodności z DNA

In the future, a genetic screen could be as common as a drug test. Employers will need technicians to collect and analyze DNA from potential hires as they attempt to screen out workers with a propensity for drug abuse or other conditions that could interfere with productivity.

Quarantine enforcer

„Stróż kwarantanny„

Are you prepared for the flu of the future? If a deadly virus starts spreading rapidly, few countries, and few people, will be prepared. That'll be good for certain occupations. Nurses will be in short supply. And when people really start dying, and neighborhoods are shut down, someone will have to guard the gates.

Drowned city specialist

Specjalista od zatopionych miast

Suppose climate change happens a lot more quickly than expected. "There will be a whole lot of jobs for people who deal with drowned cities," says Stewart Brand, a futurist and co-chairman of the Long Now Foundation. Belongings will need to be rescued, and houses must be moved to higher ground.

Robot mechanic

Mechanik robotów

The robots currently available for sale in the U.S. mostly clean carpets, filter pools or mow lawns. Eventually, these machines will drop in price, and middle-class families worldwide will be able to buy robotic personal assistants--or companions. Sony already sells the Aibo, a robotic dog, for about $2,000. He doesn't need a vet--but he might need the occasional tune-up.

Dirigible pilot

Pilot sterowców

Dirigibles will revolutionize life in the developing world, according to futurist Joel Barker, author of Five Regions of the Future. They're relatively cheap to operate, don't require expensive infrastructure like runways and can stop in midair to drop off passengers or deliver goods.

Animal guardian

Strażnik praw zwierząt

Should Koko the gorilla have the same rights as a 3-year-old child? Attorneys such as Steven Wise are pushing to classify some nonhuman animals as "persons" under the law. As our legal definitions change, we'll need specialized lawyers to represent animal interests.

Teleport specialist

Specjalista teleportacji

Imagine walking to a teleport station at the end of the block, dematerializing and reappearing at work. Cars would be gone, auto mechanics would be gone, gas station attendants would be gone and a whole new economy could develop based on the teleporter. OK, this scenario is a little far-fetched: Cars probably won't disappear in 20 years. But hey, commuters can dream.

Hollywood Holographer

Twórca hologramów

Movies aren't a Saturday night staple anymore. A plethora of cheap entertainment options, including the Internet, DVDs and videogames, keep viewers in their living rooms. One solution: holography. Consumers won't be able to afford, operate or maintain the equipment at home, forcing them back into theaters for three-dimensional movies.

Space tour guide

Kosmiczny przewodnik

Don't expect giant zero-gravity resorts and orbiting conference centers. But it's likely we'll soon be taking trips to space for pleasure and bragging rights. Virgin Galactic, a unit of Virgin Group, is already planning just such a space program. The trips, which cost $200,000, will begin in 2008.

Hydrogen Fuel Station Manager

Personel ds. wodoru

Hydrogen could be cost-competitive with gasoline if refueling stations were mass-produced, according to a study conducted by Ford. That mass production would require new factory jobs. And the hydrogen would be produced on-site, so managers would need an entirely different set of skills than required in today's gas stations, which are mainly retail operations.
